

ESSAY 1: YOUR CONSUMER LIFE

Writing Exercise 3

Due: Thur, 9/8

Reading: Fred Davis, "Blue Jeans" (SoL 93)

Writing Exercise:

Observe students on the SJSU campus (or large groups of people at some other location) congregating in a public place and note the predominant fashion styles. What are the trends that you observe? What cultural or social significance is being conveyed? Are the trends limited to particular gender, ethnic or racial groups? Takes notes on 3 people in particular.

For this writing exercise, you will write two parts:

- I. Description: Describe 3 fashion styles that you have witnessed. A description provides a snapshot of something—explaining what it looks like at a particular moment. Use the following points to clarify your written description:
 - Consider your perspective on the item you want to describe. From what angle are you observing it? Share this point of view with readers.
 - Record the most distinctive features and details, those that will enable readers to visualize what you are describing. In most types of writing, your goal is to convey an accurate impression of what you have seen, be it person, thing, or even idea.
 - Written descriptions depend heavily on modifiers—words that specify shape, size, color, smell, and so on. Modifiers should be chosen very deliberately—and used sparingly.
- II. After you have written your descriptions, analyze the fashions. Ask yourself why every detail is arranged in its specific place. For instance, why wear particular colors? What particular footwear was observed? What is the story behind the choice in fashion? Write an explanation (a theorizing) for each of the 3 fashion styles. Use small details from your descriptions to support your explanations. Be creative in making your connections.
